

PP v. TAMILARASAN MONIRAJAH & ANOR

HIGH COURT MALAYA, SHAH ALAM
AHMAD FAIRUZ ZAINOL ABIDIN JC
[CRIMINAL APPEAL NO: BA-45C-1-03-2018]
11 OCTOBER 2018

CRIMINAL LAW: Offences – Causing grievous hurt and kidnapping with intent to wrongfully confine – Plea of guilty – Whether accused persons pleaded guilty at earliest opportunity – Whether entitled to discount – Sentence of eight years imprisonment with two strokes of whipping and three years' imprisonment – Whether sentences to run concurrently or consecutively – Whether fulfilled one transaction rule – Whether sentences to run concurrently – Whether sentence within parameters of acceptable imprisonment terms – Penal Code, ss. 326 & 365

CRIMINAL PROCEDURE: Sentencing – Plea of guilty – Mitigating factors – Guilty plea at earliest opportunity – Whether accused persons entitled to discount – Whether concurrent or consecutive sentence – Whether fulfilled one transaction rule – Whether sentences to run concurrently – Whether sentence within parameters of acceptable imprisonment terms

The victim was kidnapped/wrongfully confined by the two accused persons and, during the confinement, the accused persons inflicted injuries to the victim. The two accused persons contacted the victim's wife for a ransom of RM10,000. The victim was released upon the payment of RM7,000, but the identity card of the victim was retained as collateral to ensure that the wife paid the balance of the original demand of RM10,000. The victim suffered serious injuries, inter alia, a closed fracture on the femur and a chip fracture on the finger and a first degree burnt mark on the left cheek and thigh. The accused persons were originally charged for kidnapping under s. 3 of the Kidnapping Act 1961. In the exercise of his discretion, the Public Prosecutor offered two alternative charges: (i) under s. 326 of the Penal Code for causing grievous hurt; and (ii) under s. 365 of the Penal Code for kidnapping with intent to wrongfully confine. Both accused persons pleaded guilty to the alternative charges. Satisfied that the pleas were unequivocal and unqualified, the court accepted the plea of guilty and convicted the accused persons on the two alternative charges.

Held (convicting accused persons on alternative charges):

- (1) The court took into account the plea in mitigation presented for the accused persons, who were the first offenders and had no criminal records. In general, a person should be given credit or discount for pleading guilty. The plea of guilty by both accused persons saved the

- A court's time and it warranted credit to be given to the accused persons. They had admitted to the alternative charges immediately upon being offered the opportunity by the DPP. However, the court need to also consider the public interest and strike a balance between the interest of the public and individual interest. (paras 15, 16, 18 & 23)
- B (2) Sections 282 and 292 of the Criminal Procedure Code are the relevant provisions that provide a discretion to the sentencing court when considering a concurrent or consecutive sentence. In deciding whether the terms of imprisonment should be consecutive or commence at another date, the court will be guided by the one transaction rule and the totality principle (Bachik Abdul Rahman v. PP). The test to be applied in considering the one transaction rule would be to determine if the four elements of proximity of time, proximity of place, continuity of action and continuity of purpose or design were present. However, in situations where it warrants a departure from the one transaction principle, the court may do so in the interest of justice. (paras 24, 25 & 30)
- C
- D (3) The charge sheet pertaining to the grievous hurt charge stated that the injuries were inflicted during the course of the illegal confinement and therefore, there was proximity of time between the two offences. Proximity of place was established as the offences were committed in one of the rooms in the house of the second accused. In terms of continuity of action and continuity of purpose, which was to ensure that they achieved the objective of being paid, was clearly established. The injuries were deliberately caused during that said period to further pressure the victim. The preconditions to the one transaction rule had been fulfilled and therefore, the imposition of a concurrent sentence was the correct sentence to pass. (paras 28, 29 & 33)
- E
- F
- G (4) The injuries inflicted on the victim were serious, and thus, fell under the definition of grievous hurt in s. 320 of the Penal Code. Guided by the precedents, for the offence under s. 326 of the Penal Code, the court imposed a sentence of eight years imprisonment with two strokes of whipping, a sentence within the parameters of an acceptable imprisonment terms and reflected the current trend of sentencing. As for the offence of kidnapping with intention to secretly or wrongful confinement under s. 365 of the Penal Code, a sentence of three years imprisonment was appropriate and commensurate with the offence committed where the confinement was less than 24 hours. Relying on the one transaction principle, the sentences were ordered to run concurrently. (paras 35, 37 & 40-42)

JUDGMENTAhmad Fairuz Zainol Abidin JC:*Background

[1] The accused persons were originally charged for kidnapping under s. 3 of the Kidnapping Act 1961. The Public Prosecutor, in exercise of his discretion, offered two alternative charges to the accused persons with condition that they plead guilty to the both alternative charges. The first alternative charge was for causing grievous hurt under s. 326 of the Penal Code (“the grievous hurt charge”) and the second alternative charge was for kidnapping with intent to wrongfully confine under s. 365 of the Penal Code (“the kidnapping charge”).

I

A [2] Upon being offered the said alternative charges, both the accused persons pleaded guilty. The court went on to remind the accused persons of the consequences of their plea. The court then asked them if they wish to maintain their guilty plea. They were firm in their decision.

B [3] Both accused persons also admitted to the facts presented by the prosecution. This court then accepted the plea of guilty and convicted them on the two alternative charges that they had each pleaded to. This court was satisfied that the pleas were unequivocal and unqualified.

C [4] This court then sentenced each of the accused persons to eight years imprisonment and two strokes of whipping for the grievous hurt charge under s. 326 of the Penal Code. For the kidnapping charge under s. 365 of the Penal Code, this court sentenced both the accused persons to three years imprisonment. Both sentences were ordered to run concurrently from the date of arrest.

D [5] By a notice of appeal dated 16 August 2018, the Public Prosecutor appealed to the Court of Appeal on the inadequacy of sentence imposed by this court.

[6] This is the grounds of judgment of this court.

Submission By Parties

- G [8] Both counsels on record Encik Saladin bin Mohd Yasin and Encik Ridha Abdah Subri were appointed by the court.
- H [9] Encik Saladin bin Mohd Yasin submitted that the first accused was 36 years old, married and has two children. He is an odd job worker with an income of less than RM3,000 per month. He is remorseful and promises not to get involved in any crime in future.
- I [10] Encik Ridha Abdah Subri submitted that the second accused cooperated with the police which led to the recovery of the monies involved. He is remorseful and prior to his arrest, he was taking care of his aged mother. He is also the leader in the family taking care of his sisters as his father had passed away. His willingness to plead guilty at the earliest possible opportunity showed remorse on his part and had saved the court's time.

[11] The learned DPP Puan Mahmoodah binti Abdul Latiff on the other hand, contended that the offence committed by both the accused persons were serious in nature. Serious injury had been caused to the victim that warranted a heavy punishment. The DPP also submitted that the accused persons should not have taken the law into their own hands irrespective of the disagreement between the parties. She submitted that public interest demands a deterrent sentence.

Analysis And Decision Of This Court

[12] This court is guided by the rule that a sentence passed must one that is in accordance with law. This means that the sentence imposed must not only be within the ambit of the punishable section but must also be assessed and passed in accordance with established judicial principles (Tan Lay Chen v. PP [2000] 4 CLJ 492).

[13] It is also a recognised principle that the discretion in passing sentence is solely with the sentencing court. In New Tuck Shen v. PP [1982] CLJ 38B; [1982] CLJ (Rep) 606, Wan Yahya J held as follows:

.. The right to impose punishment on a guilty party is absolutely the discretion of the court. It will exercise that power judicially but will not tolerate any encroachment or even semblance of encroachment either by the prosecution or the defence in respect of such right.

[14] The principles on sentencing were also succinctly spelt out in the case of Yusmarin Samsudin v. PP [1999] 4 CLJ 391 by Siti Norma Yaacob J (as she then was) where she held:

The principles of sentencing have long been entrenched and well settled in our criminal law jurisprudence and a court seized with such jurisdiction is empowered to take into account the following considerations:

- (1) the extent and seriousness of the offence committed;
- (2) the guilty person's antecedents; and
- (3) the public interest

[15] The court took into account the plea in mitigation presented by both counsels. It was submitted by both counsels and agreed by the prosecution that the two accused persons were first offenders and had no previous criminal records. In PP v. Jafa Daud [1981] 1 LNS 28; [1981] 1 MLJ 315, apart from expanding the principles in relation to sentencing, Mohamed Azmi J held as follows:

I

- A A 'sentence according to law' means that the sentence must not only be within the ambit of the punishable section, but it must also be assessed and passed in accordance with established judicial principles. In assessing sentence, one of the main factors to be considered is whether the convicted person is a first offender. It is for this purpose that before passing sentence, a Magistrate is required to call for evidence or information regarding the background, antecedent and character of the accused.
- B Where the convicted person has previous records and admits them as correct, the court must consider whether the offence or offences committed previously were of similar nature as the one with which he is presently charged. The court must then consider the sentences imposed in the previous convictions for similar offences to determine whether they have had any deterrent effect on him. Where he is found to be a persistent offender for a similar type of offences, then it is in the interest of justice that a deterrent sentence should be passed and, in such a case, unless there are exceptional circumstances, the quantity, nature of value of the subject-matter of the offence with which he is currently charged can very rarely constitute a mitigating factor. (emphasis added)
- C
- D [16] It is a generally accepted rule that a person should be given credit or discount for pleading guilty (PP v. Ravindran & Ors [1992] 1 LNS 47; [1993] 1 MLJ 45; PP v. Sulaiman Ahmad [1992] 4 CLJ 2283; [1992] 3 CLJ (Rep) 447; [1993] 1 MLJ 74). The plea of guilty by both accused persons saved court time. This court's therefore, found this as a factor that would work in
- E favour of the accused persons. Whether a person is a hardened criminal or otherwise, a plea of guilt is a mitigating factor (Sau Soo Kim v. PP [1975] 1 LNS 158; [1975] 2 MLJ 134).
- F [17] As to what amount of credit is attached to the plea of guilty depends on the facts and circumstances of the case. It is not automatic. If the offence committed by the accused outweigh the mitigating effect of a guilty plea or where the public interest demands a deterrent sentence (Sim Gek Yong v. PP [1995] 1 SLR 537). However, when the plea of guilt is considered by the court, the question therefore, what is the value of such a plea. In Mohd Abdullah Ang Swee Kang v. PP [1987] 2 CLJ 405; [1987] CLJ (Rep) 209, the
- G guidance given was a discount of one third of the sentence that would otherwise have been imposed by the court can be considered by the sentencing court.
- H [18] This court was of the considered view that the plea of guilty warranted credit to be given to the accused persons. They had admitted to the alternative charges immediately upon being offered the opportunity by the DPP.
- I [19] However, it would be remiss on this court if it did not consider public interest apart for the interest of the accused persons. In fact, it should be the foremost consideration as the object of punishment is not only with the objective of punishing crime but also preventing it. (R v. Kenneth John Ball [1951] 35 Cr App R 164).

[20] The Court of Appeal in the case of Iwan Bujang Dara & Anor v. PP [2017] 1 LNS 285; [2017] MLJU 283 as follows: A

But the court is not only concerned with the plea in mitigation in passing sentence. No matter how strong the plea in mitigation is in favour of a lenient sentence, the court's overriding consideration has always been and will always be the public interest. B

[21] Against public interest is the personal interest of the two accused persons (see Tan Sri Abdul Rahim Mohd Noor v. PP [2001] 4 CLJ 9). The mitigation of both the accused persons touched on the family factor. That they were the sole breadwinners and were taking care of their families. Such reasons are not uncommon. C

[22] In Teh Ah Cheng v. PP [1976] 1 LNS 116; [1976] 2 MLJ 186, Eusoffe Abdool Cader J (as he then was) opined at p. 187 (MLJ):

The respondent also puts forward in his plea in mitigation the fact that he is employed and supports an aged mother and step-brothers. He should of course have thought of this before committing the offence and not after, he is in fact pleading hardship arising from the consequences of his own acts and I would reiterate what I had occasion previously to observe in another case that an offender should not expect to excite or harness any sympathy on an ipse dixit by taking the stance of the impetuous youth who killed his parents with an axe and then pleaded in mitigation that he was an orphan. D E

[23] As such, a balance needs to be struck between the interest of the public and the individual interest.

Concurrent Or Consecutive Sentence

[24] Sections 282 and 292 are the relevant provisions in the Criminal Procedure Code that provide a discretion to the sentencing court when considering a concurrent or consecutive sentence. The position in law was lucidly explained in Bachik Abdul Rahman v. PP [2004] 2 CLJ 572 at pp. 579 of the report. The court held as follows: F G

The combined effect of s. 282 and s. 292 is that unless the Court imposing a sentence says anything to the contrary, the sentence runs from the date on which it was passed (see Ooi Sim Yim v. PP [1990] 1 CLJ 435; [1990] 1 CLJ (Rep) 223). The exercise of the discretion to determine the date of commencement of the sentence of imprisonment is dependent on the facts and circumstances of each case. In deciding whether the terms of imprisonment should be consecutive or commence at another date the court will be guided by the one transaction rule and the totality principle. Pursuant to the one transaction rule where two or more offences are committed in the course of a single transaction all sentences in respect of these offences should be concurrent rather than consecutive (see R v. Saleem [1964] Crim LR 482; R v. Walsh [1965] Crim LR 248) ... H I

(emphasis added).

A [25] The test to be applied in considering the one transaction rule would be to determine if the four elements of proximity of time, proximity of place, continuity of action and continuity of purpose or design were present (see Jayaraman & Ors v. PP [1979] 1 LNS 36; [1979] 2 MLJ 88; Amrita Lal Hazra v. Emperor (1915) ILR 42 Cal 957; Chin Choy v. PP [1955] 1 LNS 17; [1955] MLJ 236).

B [26] This principle was affirmed in the Court of Appeal in PP v. Prabu Veeramuthu & Ors [2010] 8 CLJ 257 which provided the following guidance:

C ... the court should be guided by the one transaction rule and the totality principle. Pursuant to the one transaction rule where two or more offences were committed in the course of one transaction, all sentences in respect of those offences should be concurrent rather than consecutive. For there to be one transaction, there must be four elements present, ie, proximity of time, proximity of place, continuity of action and continuity of purpose or design.

D [27] Similarly, in the case of SA Jamil Md Yusof v. PP [2002] 7 CLJ 132, it was held as follows:

E What amounts to “distinct” offences was established by the Indian case of Amrita Lal Hazra & Others v. Emperor ILR 42 Cal 957 where it was held that there are four main tests which help in the legal determination as to what amounts to “the same transaction”. They are proximity of time, unity or proximity of place, continuity of action and community of purpose or design.

F [28] In carrying out an examination of the facts, what is patently clear to this court was the fact that the said kidnapping/illegal confinement was carried out at 9pm on the night of 16 September 2017. It lasted until the time the victim was released the following morning on 17 September 2017. It was during the said period of confinement that the injuries were caused. The charge sheet pertaining to the grievous hurt charge as found in P3(a), stated that the injuries were inflicted during the course of the illegal confinement (between 9.30pm to 11pm). This allows this court to rule that there was proximity of time between the two offences. On the issue of proximity of place, this court will not venture at length to rule that the offences were committed in one of the rooms in the second accused’s house.

G [29] Similarly, in terms of continuity of action and, community of purpose which at that point, was to ensure that they achieve the objective of being paid, was clearly established. The injuries were deliberately caused during that said period to further pressure the victim.

I

[30] However, the one transaction and totality principle is not cast in stone and in situations where it warrants a departure from the one transaction principle, the court may do so in the interest of justice. Also, if the facts so warrant or if the intended outcome of sending the message of abhorrence to the action of the offender needs to be highlighted by the court to the public, the court is at full liberty to decide accordingly.

[31] Even if the imprisonment had a crushing effect on the accused by virtue of it being lengthy in total, in PP v. Nai Boon Wah [2012] 2 CLJ 222; [2011] MLJU 1132 the Court of Appeal, speaking through Hasan bin Lah J (as he then was), justified the departure from the one transaction rule as follows:

As decided in Sau Soo Kim the question whether the sentences should run consecutively or concurrently must depend upon the particular circumstances of the case. On the facts and circumstances of this case and in line with the decisions of this court in Bachik Abdul Rahman, Yit Kean Hong and Prabu Veeramuthu we are of the view that this is a proper case for the court to apply the exception to the one transaction rule and the totality principle in deciding to order the two terms of imprisonment to run consecutively. In addition, the two offences committed by the respondent were very serious and each punishable with imprisonment of up to 20 years. This case also involved two separate and distinct offences and two different victims. In this case too a matter which attracted the application of the exception to the one transaction principle was the fact that the second killing resulted from merciless anger. The facts show that the respondent came back to finish off the second deceased after having dealt with the first deceased at the entrance of the bistro. The second deceased was still at the table where he had originally sat offering no resistance when the respondent stabbed him to death. We are further of the view that consecutive sentences are necessary in order to discourage violent crime affecting the human body resulting in death as public interest is paramount. Had the learned judge given adequate consideration to the circumstances and facts of this case and the authorities referred to earlier he would have, in our view, ordered that the two sentences to run consecutively. It is our judgment that the learned judge had erred in not applying the exception to the one transaction rule and the totality principle to this case.

[32] In Nai Boon Wah (supra) the Court of Appeal had every reason to disagree with the one transaction rule. The acts carried out were senseless and nefarious. Any decision other than the one taken in that case would be manifestly contrary to public interest (see also Prabu Veeramuthu (supra), Bachik Abdul Rahman (supra)).

A [33] In the current case before this court, it is the finding of this court that the preconditions to the one transaction rule laid down in Amrita Lal (supra) have been fulfilled. That being the case, upon considering the facts, this court is of the view that the imposition of a concurrent sentence is the correct sentence to pass. Clearly, the facts and circumstances did not fall near those shown in Nai Boon Wah (supra).

B [34] From the facts presented by the prosecution, the kidnapping/wrongful confinement of the victim was amateurishly carried out. The two accused persons had actually contacted the wife of the victim directly and even went on to pick up the said ransom personally. They also retained the identity card of the victim as collateral to ensure that the wife pays the balance of their original demand of RM10,000.

C [35] The injuries inflicted on the victim were however, serious. The fracture suffered by the victim as stated in the medical report P9, showed that there was a closed fracture on the femur and a chip fracture on the finger. This fell under the definition of grievous hurt in s. 320 of the Penal Code. There was also a first degree burnt mark on the left cheek and thigh of the victim.

D [36] From the facts of the case, the accused persons used a piece of rotan and an iron rod to hit the victim. However, no such exhibits were produced in court to enable this court to examine the weapons used. The pictures tendered into court as P8 also showed a variety of weapons such as an axe and other paraphernalia that could cause the injuries suffered by the victim. However, the prosecution did not allude to any of the items shown in the photographs to link with the injuries inflicted on the victim.

E
F Length Of Sentence

G [37] On the grievous hurt charge, this court looked at precedents to determine as a guide, the appropriate sentence to impose on the accused persons. No two facts would be similar and the circumstances of how the offences were committed can never be the same. However, this court is allowed to be guided by precedent.

H [38] In the recent case of PP v. Rozita Mohamad Ali [2018] 9 CLJ 265, the High Court embarked on a comparison of the trend of sentencing imposed by courts in recent years. The precedents are reproduced below:

I [43] Keeping in the forefront of my mind all the authorities aforesaid, I shall now examine some cases of similar offence with regard to sentencing:

- 43.1 Rosli bin Supardi [2002] 3 CLJ 544, the Court of Appeal substituted the sentence of six years' imprisonment and three strokes with 12 years imprisonment and five strokes. The appellant claimed trial and convicted. He was a first offender. The victim's throat was cut several times. A
- 43.2 Annanthan Subramaniam v. PP [2007] 8 CLJ 1 the High Court maintained the sentence of eight years and eight strokes. The appellant aged 20, pleaded guilty and a first offender. The weapon used was a Rambo knife. The victim was stabbed in her abdomen and her throat was cut after the appellant raped her. All in all the appellant suffered twenty years imprisonment as the sentence for section 326 was made to run concurrently with the twenty years' imprisonment for rape. B

Factors like first offender and pleading guilty apparently did not really find favour with the courts in cases of this nature.

[39] In Rozita Mohamad Ali (supra), the High Court sentenced the accused person to eight years imprisonment for an offence under s. 326 of the Penal Code. The charge had originally been an offence of attempted murder under s. 307 of the Penal Code. The injuries suffered by the victim were almost fatal to the victim.

Conclusion

[40] This court is of the opinion that for the offence under s. 326 of the Penal Code, the sentence of eight years imprisonment with two strokes of whipping is a sentence that is within the parameters of an acceptable imprisonment terms as demonstrated in previous cases. This court is also of the considered view that it reflects the current trend of sentencing.

[41] For the offence of kidnapping with intention to secretly or wrongful confine under s. 365 of the Penal Code, a sentence of three years is appropriate and it does commensurate with the offence committed where the confinement was less than 24 hours.

[42] On the issue of concurrent or consecutive sentences, this court, in exercising the allowable discretion bestowed on it and relying on the one transaction principle, finds that justice is served if both the punishments were to run concurrently.
